LIFE EXPECTANCY IN CHICAGO

In 2010 life expectancy for Chicagoans was up in all neighborhoods compared with 1990, but there is still more than a 15-year difference in life expectancy across neighborhoods. The homicide mortality rate for black males is 24.5 times higher than it is for white males, according to the city's health department.

Chicago's life expectancy rose between 1990, 2010

Chicago Tribune

Nearly a quarter-century ago, a newborn residing in West Garfield Park could expect to live slightly more than 63 years.

A child's life expectancy at birth in the community area, bounded to the west and east by Kenton Avenue and Hamlin Boulevard, inched forward during the following two decades, according to data recently probed by the city of Chicago. By 2010, a West Garfield Park newborn had an average outlook of roughly 69 years.

The Chicago Department of Public Health said this increase in longevity and others observed throughout the city just between 1990 and 2010 signals the city is getting healthier.

But two decades of state mortality data analyzed by the city also reiterate hard truths that have long confronted local authorities, researchers and the people of America's third-largest city: Chicago's longevity gains were undercut by persistent disparities between neighborhoods.

A city resident born in 2010 had an average life expectancy of 77.8 years, officials announced in a June report about city resident longevity, some seven years longer than a child born in 1990.

Life expectancy at birth in the city in 1990 lagged about five years behind the U.S. average, yet city researchers concluded Chicago sped to largely close the gap with a climbing national average two decades later.

Researchers routinely examine life expectancy statistics and related data for valuable insights into a community's survival prospects, though the health department believes its study provides the city's most extensive long-term, neighborhood-based breakdown of how long Chicagoans are living.

The health department concluded Chicago's sexes, racial-ethnic groups and community areas made across-the-board gains in life expectancy at birth between 1990 and 2010, a result praised by independent experts. But disparities between some neighborhoods remain.

In 2010, for example, a newborn living in Chicago's Near North Side had a life expectancy of about 85 years—among the city's highest that year, which placed well above the national average.

West Garfield Park ranked among community areas with the city's worst life expectancy—about the same as a child in Iraq.

"At the end of the day, the disparities that we're seeing in Chicago are not much different than the disparities we see across the country, especially in urban environments," said Dr. Bechara Choucair, the city's public health commissioner. "The good news is, we're starting to close that gap, and that's really the important piece."

Roughly 30 community areas in Chicago boasted life expectancies at birth of more than 80 years in 2010. Some, including the Near North Side and Loop areas, hit the 85-year mark that year.

The Near South Side saw the largest average increase in life expectancy at birth, at nearly 21 years, between 1990 and 2010.

A diverse list of community areas also were among the areas with the biggest increases during that period. Grand Boulevard, the Near West Side, Oakland, Kenwood, Uptown, Woodlawn, the Loop and Washington Park saw life expectancy boosts during the two-decade period ranging from about 11 to 17 years.

West Garfield Park, Washington Park and Fuller Park were estimated to have the city's lowest life expectancies at birth in 2010, in the high 60s but not quite reaching 70 years of age.

Gay men deserve to donate blood

Zach Stafford

redeye@tribune.com
@ZachStafford

The first time I tried to give blood, I was turned away.

It was my freshman year of college. A friend in my dorm told me about an on-campus blood drive and asked me to go with her. I've never been good at blood draws so I'd never tried to donate, but this time, maybe due to my status as a newly freed teenager, I thought I'd give it a try.

As I filled out my paperwork at the drive, I came across a question I'd never been asked before in a setting like this: Are you a man who has had sexual relations with another man since 1977? Along with being a newly free teen, I was also a newly proud gay man, so I marked "yes" with no hesitation. When I returned my paperwork to the student volunteer, she scanned it and within five seconds said, "Sorry, we can't take your blood." I asked why. Her response: "AIDS."

In 1983, around the onset of the HIV pandemic, the Food and Drug Administration banned men who have ever had sex with other men from donating blood as a way to lower the risk of HIV transmission through blood transfusion. At the time, very little was known about the virus, and access to technology to adequately test blood was hard to come by. So, in many ways, the ban made sense back then.

But this is 2014. AIDS is no longer (and actually never has been) just a "gay cancer," as it was painted to be in the early 1980s. As time and the virus have raged on, we have learned that HIV does not discriminate based on gender or race or sexuality.

The FDA now requires that donors be prescreened based on risk factors related to HIV and other infectious diseases, covering areas like drug use, medical history and current health status. Based on these answers, most people, depending on their risk, are given varying times during which they can donate. For example, someone determined to be low-risk could give blood that day. A heterosexual woman who possibly had been exposed to HIV would be deferred for a year and then allowed to donate.

But a man who has had sex with another man indefinitely is banned from giving blood—regardless of HIV status.

In 2006, the American Association for Blood Banks, America's Blood Centers and the American Red Cross urged the FDA to change its policy, calling the ban "medically and scientifically unwarranted." In 2013, the American Medical Association took the call even further and labeled the ban just plain discrimination.

On Friday, a National Gay Blood Drive will be held in the hope of raising awareness around this issue. Gay and bisexual men are urged to bring friends who can donate to blood banks to show just how much more potentially could be given—up to 219,000 pints each year, according to a 2010 report from the Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law.

Now that same-sex marriage is rolling across the country, I think it's time we all start looking at what other work needs to be done. Allowing gay and bisexual men to donate is a cause that could help save lives. HIV doesn't discriminate—and neither does blood.

Source: Cubs agree to mayor's Wrigley renovation conditions

Chicago Tribune

The Cubs agreed to Mayor Emanuel's requested conditions in order to present its latest renovation proposal Thursday to the Commission on Chicago Landmarks, including reducing the size of signs along exterior outfield walls and to continue negotiating with rooftop owners who have said the signs will hurt their businesses, according to a City Hall source.

The source said that the team "agreed to make 10 changes that preserve the historical significance of Wrigley Field and are mindful of neighbors of Wrigleyville."

The changes requested by the city include reducing the size of the signs along the exterior outfield walls and increasing spacing between them, as well as eliminating plans for sliding concession windows for the exterior brick wall at Waveland and Sheffield avenues. The team also agreed to drop enlarged openings in the outfield brick wall for new bullpens, a change the team previously announced.

The source added that the team agreed to make changes to lighting to address concerns and to continue conversations with the rooftop owners in a timely manner. Other changes are expected to be presented Thursday.

A major obstacle for approval could be the team's proposal for seven signs—not merely a video board in right field and a script sign in left field, which were the approved signs from a year ago—to dot the walls along both Waveland and Sheffield avenues. The seven signs would seemingly block views into the ballparks from nearly all of the three-story rooftop businesses, potentially violating a decade-old contract and thrusting the two sides into a courtroom.

Landmarks Commission must review the plan because of the 2004 Wrigley landmark ordinance, which states that the "uninterrupted sweep of the bleachers" is a protected historic feature of the ballpark.

Cubs spokesman Julian Green said the team had resolved any outstanding issues with the commission several weeks ago and is prepared to make its presentation to the commission.

"If we gain this final approval, we are prepared to invest $575 million to restore and expand Wrigley Field and develop the surrounding area immediately," he said. "And given this project will move forward without taxpayer dollars, we are focused on creating every advantage possible to innovate, operate efficiently and grow our business faster than the other 29 clubs trying to compete for a World Series trophy every year."

THE DIGIT*89

Chinese tycoon and real estate developer Wang Jianlin has announced plans to buy a 90 percent stake in a planned 89-story skyscraper on Wacker Drive east of Michigan Avenue. The development, which would include a luxury hotel and apartments, would be the third-tallest in Chicago and one of the last remaining pieces of the Lakeshore East development. The area, a former golf course for years, is roughly bordered by Lake Shore Drive to the east, Michigan Avenue to the west, the Chicago River to the north and Millennium Park to the south. TRIBUNE

Bloody week includes 200th homicide of year

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Chicago logged 18 gunshot homicides in the past week through Wednesday afternoon, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

Much of the violence happened during the Fourth of July weekend, which saw 10 homicides Friday through Sunday, according to RedEye data. The West Englewood, South Chicago and Washington Heights community areas were the hardest hit over the past week, RedEye determined.

West Englewood recorded four homicides in the past week, RedEye determined.

On Monday, a 19-year-old woman was fatally shot in the 2200 block of West 69th Street, police said. Two days earlier, an 18-year-old man was shot to death in the 6500 block of South Seeley Avenue, according to officials.

On Friday, two men ages 34 and 35 were shot to death in the 6300 block of South Damen Avenue, police said.

West Englewood has logged 10 homicides so far this year including five killings this month. The South Side community area recorded 21 homicides in 2013, up from 20 killings in 2012, RedEye determined.

Meanwhile, South Chicago logged three killings in the past week, RedEye found.

On Monday, a 24-year-old man was shot to death in the 8400 block of South Buffalo Avenue, police said. One day earlier, a 25-year-old man was fatally shot in the 3000 block of East 81st Street, according to officials.

On Saturday, a 23-year-old man was shot to death in the 8700 block of South Houston Avenue, police said.

South Chicago has logged 10 homicides so far this year. The South Side community area recorded 11 homicides in 2013, down from 14 killings in 2012, RedEye determined.

Also on the South Side, Washington Heights recorded two homicides this week.

A 17-year-old boy was shot to death Tuesday in the 9200 block of South Eggleston Avenue, police said. One day earlier, a 19-year-old man was shot to death in the 9600 block of South Sangamon Street, according to officials.

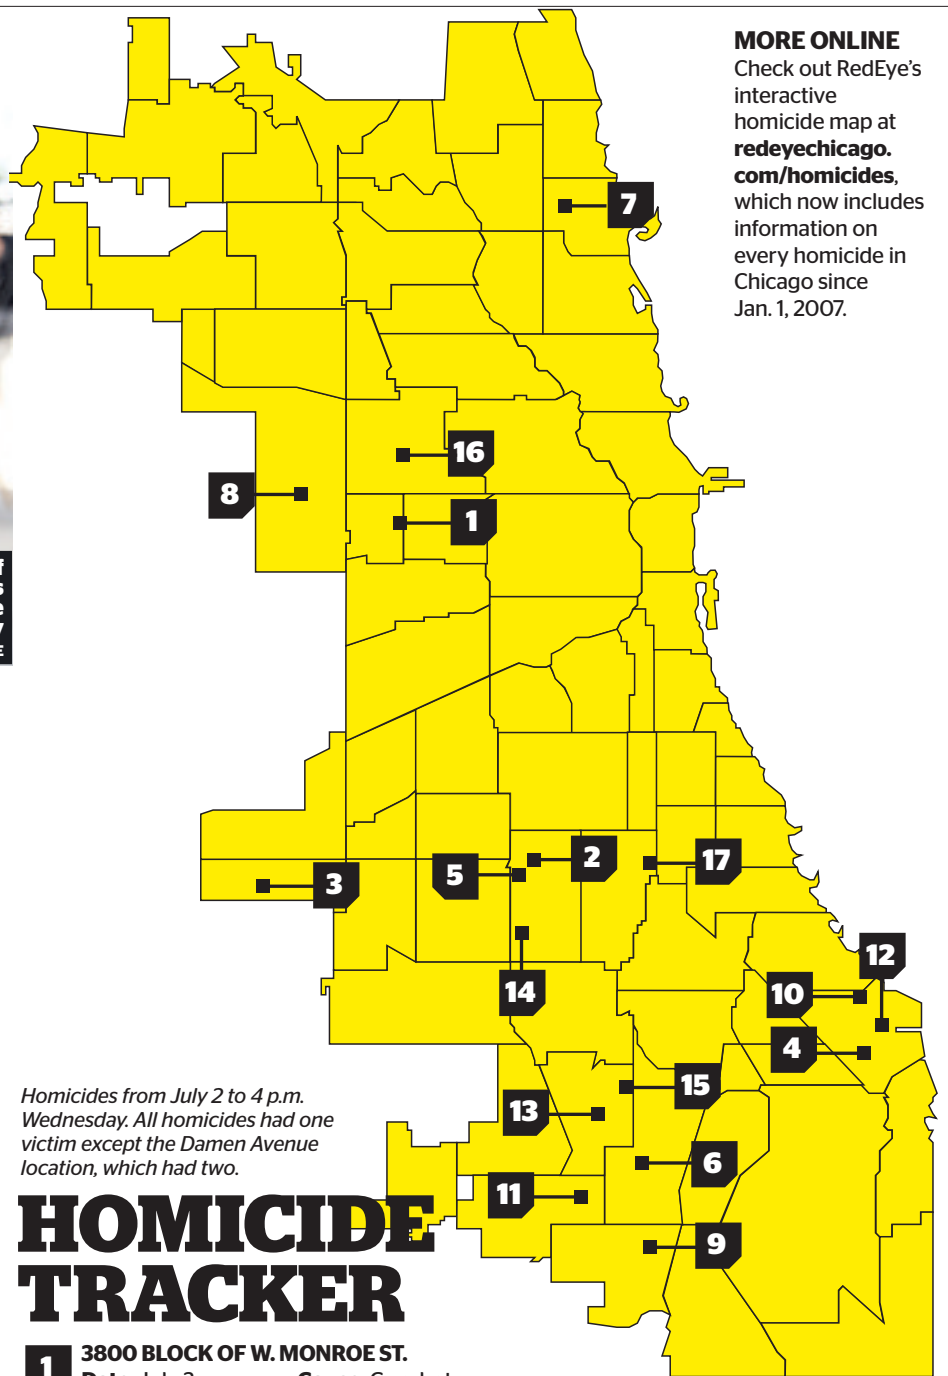

Washington Heights has logged five homicides so far this year. The South Side community area recorded nine homicides in 2013, up from six killings in 2012, RedEye found.

Citywide, gunshot homicides were logged in the past week in Austin, Clearing, Humboldt Park, Morgan Park, Roseland, Uptown, West Garfield Park, West Pullman and on the Dan Ryan Expressway, where 25-year-old Jasmine Curry was shot to death in her van in the Englewood area, according to police information.

Also, on Monday, the city recorded its 200th homicide of the year, RedEye determined. This mark was reached on July 4 in 2013, RedEye found.

Twenty-one homicides have been logged so far this month. Fifty-three homicides were recorded in July 2013, RedEye determined.

Black Dog Syndrome

Darker fur an adoption deterrent for dogs?

Slate

Just when you were hoping there were no new ways to be racist, it turns out people may be racist against dogs. Black Dog Syndrome is the name shelter workers have given to the tendency of dark-furred pups to languish while their lighter-furred brethren get adopted.

"The effect is very real," said Mirah Horowitz, executive director and founder of Washington, D.C.-based Lucky Dog Animal Rescue. "We recently had a litter of five very cute, very fluffy puppies, two yellow and three black. And the yellow ones all went immediately, but for the black ones it took weeks."

Black dogs get euthanized at higher rates. They linger at pounds and adoption agencies for longer than light-colored dogs, and they are less likely to find a home.

Marika Bell, director of behavior and rehoming for the Humane Society of Washington, D.C., says the organization has been tracking animals that have stayed at their shelters the longest since March 2013. They found that three characteristics put a pet at risk: medium size, an age of 2 to 3 years and an ebony coat.

What kind of psychological quirk would prevent someone from adopting a dog based on fur color?

Animal welfare experts believe the discrimination arises from a pack of factors. The mythology around black dogs is grim.

A 2013 study by Penn State psychologists revealed that people find images of black dogs scarier than photos of yellow or brown dogs—respondents rated the dark-furred animals less adoptable, less friendly and more intimidating. And while the association between obsidian and evil is more explicit for cats, dogs have to contend with a culture, post-Samuel Johnson and Winston Churchill, that symbolizes depression as a coal-colored hound.

Some dismiss Black Dog Syndrome as an urban legend, noting a paucity of hard data supporting the effect. As a measure of how common raven-haired pups are, the Los Angeles Animal Services Department reported in 2008 that 27 percent of the 30,046 dogs it had picked up in the previous 12 months had predominantly sable coats. That prevalence was mirrored in the year's adoption statistics: 28 percent of the animals that eventually found homes also were predominantly black. And in a 2012 study, researchers asked volunteers to rank four hypothetical pooches—a big white poodle, a small white poodle, a big black poodle, and a small black poodle—on perceived friendliness and aggressiveness. They discovered that the imaginary white dogs were seen as significantly meaner and more combative than the imaginary black ones, perhaps due to stereotypes about yappy white lap-dog terrors.

In any case, the study raised questions about whether what spooks us about black pups is their color or the association between dark fur and several of dogdom's more reputedly vicious breeds: Rottweilers, Dobermans and some pit bull mixes.

"There are lots of compounding factors," Julie Morris, the senior vice president of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, told ABC. "Are there just more black dogs in shelters, or is the real problem because most black dogs are also big dogs?"

(The prevailing wisdom goes that big dogs have a harder time finding homes, perhaps because they seem less manageable. As the Washington Humane Society data suggests, though, it may be medium dogs that scrape together the worst of both worlds: not tiny enough to fit in a purse, not huge enough to be a sexy statement.)

Whatever the precise mix of bias and bad luck, some white knights are riding to black dogs' defense. Many shelters have discounts on dark-furred animals. There are photography Tumblrs and online rescue projects dedicated to the plight of the canine noir. There are tip sheets on how to "bedazzle your black dog." There are black pet adoption GIFs. Even Emmylou Harris has joined the cause.

"The effect is baffling," Bell said. "I just want to tell people sometimes, 'This is an amazing dog. You've got to look at this dog.'"

Chicago author gored by bull at Pamplona

Chicago Tribune

A Chicago author who wrote a chapter of the book "Fiesta: How to Survive the Bulls of Pamplona" was gored Wednesday during the Spanish bull running festival.

"When I fell, the bull fell with me and gored me in one motion," said Bill Hillmann, 32, who spoke by phone from his hospital room in Spain. "The horn went in one side of my thigh and exited the other side, and he pulled it through."

But Hillmann, who grew up in Chicago's Edgewater neighborhood and today lives in Little Village, said he plans to run again next year.

The former Chicago boxing champion's chapter in the 2014 e-book about the event offers frank advice to would-be bull runners that ranges from shoe selection to which parts of the course are appropriate for beginners.

"You cannot run a very long distance with the bulls," Hillmann wrote. "They have four legs. They're faster than you."

The animal that gored him Wednesday was the heaviest of the morning's six bulls, weighing around 1,300 pounds. Hillmann, an occasional RedEye contributor, said he had no hard feelings.

"I don't hold a grudge," he said. "That animal, it was a beautiful bull. And if I wouldn't have been pushed and tripped up and fallen down with him, I would have a great run with that bull."

Stop worrying, Chicago: Hawks' dynamic duo signs through 2022-23

Chicago Tribune

Talents the likes of Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane come around once in a lifetime in the NHL.

No one realizes that more than Rocky Wirtz, John McDonough, Stan Bowman and the rest of the Blackhawks' hierarchy, so they did not wait long to lock in the young forwards to eight-year contract extensions worth $10.5 million per year that will run through the 2022-23 season.

"When we started our journey, we made a commitment to our fans to be relevant and to see the Chicago Blackhawks become the best professional hockey organization," Chairman Wirtz said in a statement. "There are not two finer symbols of that than Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane. The commitment we have made to these incredible young men is equal to the commitment they have made to our team, our fans, our entire organization and the city of Chicago. We are excited for our future and proud that they will continue to be a part of that commitment and success for years to come."

Like they did with their second NHL contracts, Toews and Kane agreed to new deals together Tuesday that should help ensure the Hawks remain Stanley Cup title contenders for the next decade or so.

"I could not be more grateful for the amazing moments and opportunities I've been given by the Chicago Blackhawks," Toews said. "There's no organization in sports that cares more about the overall experience of their fans and the success of their players. To have the chance to continue with this amazing group of teammates and people throughout the organization is an incredible honor. There's nothing we want more as players than to continue to win Stanley Cups for the best hockey fans on the planet."

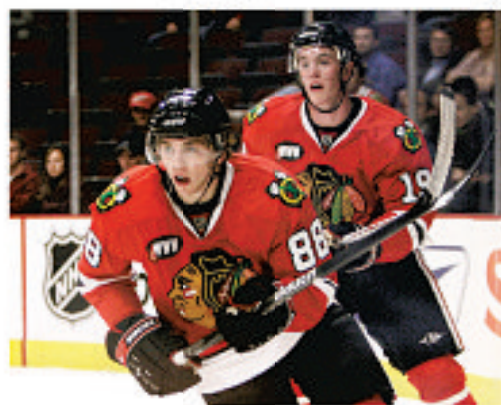

The extensions will keep the dynamic duo from reaching free agency and kick in for the 2015-16 season.

"It's great to be able to continue my career in Chicago," Kane said. "Playing with the best organization in sports and the best fans in the game is a blessing. Since

MONEY, CASH, BROS

Good luck separating Kane and Toews. Not that anyone in Chicago would want to.

OCT. 10, 2007: FIRST TIME ON THE ICE

Their story began one crisp fall afternoon against San Jose. Actually, we don't know what the weather was like. We do know Kane and Toews started on the same line, and Toews scored on his first NHL shot.

JUNE 11, 2010: CHAMPIONS

During the first Stanley Cup run, Toews won the Conn Smythe Trophy for being playoff MVP. During the second, in 2013, Kane earned the award. At least one tiebreaker is needed, fellas.

MAY 2, 2014: I LOVE YOU, MAN

Nothing says "you go, boy" like a playoff pregame butt slap. Classic Toews.

Chicago teams have been happy to plunk down boatloads of cash for players they think will deliver titles. Here are a few of the key contracts doled out recently.

"I was drafted by the Blackhawks, the people of Chicago have really embraced me and treated me with nothing but respect. I look forward to many more years of success with the Blackhawks."

Toews, 26, and Kane, 25, already have amassed resumes that put them in discussion for the Hockey Hall of Fame. In addition to both being two-time Cup champs, each has won a Conn Smythe Trophy as most valuable players in a postseason.

Toews has won two Olympic gold medals while playing for Canada and has a Selke Trophy as the league's top defensive forward. Kane has a silver medal obtained while playing for the U.S. and was the NHL's Calder Trophy winner as rookie of the year in 2008.

Toews was the Hawks' top pick (third overall) in the 2006 NHL entry draft and has amassed 195 goals and 245 assists in 484 career-regular season games.

Kane, the No. 1 overall pick in the 2007 draft, has 178 goals and 315 assists in 515 career regular-season contests.

"Jonathan and Patrick have become cornerstones of this franchise during their time in Chicago," general manager Stan Bowman said. "We are excited to ensure they will continue to lead our organization for years to come."

1	Why have the Blackhawks had so much coaching turnover?	If you can't grow a sweet, sweet Q-stache, you're out.	They keep getting stolen from Johnny's Ice House. Maybe the Blackhawks should just practice in the suburbs.	I read "turnover" and thought "apple turnover." Mmmmm, apple turnovers!	They are trying to save money to sign LeBron James.	Coach Q's mustache is clearly on a power trip.
2	After thrashing Brazil, what does Germany do for a World Cup encore?	DAS BOOTS FOR ALL.	Hide from angry Brazil fans.	I'm waiting for a bicycle kick, Germany player. GET IT DONE!	Sign Carmelo Anthony.	Shotskis for everyone!
3	Crying is to Brazilian fans as crying is to Heat fans, when they realize that buying championships doesn't always work.	... reserved sighing into an Old Style is to Cubs fans.	... Bears fans are to thinking they're entitled to reach the playoffs every year.	... missing out on free agents is to Chicago.	... overspending is to Taste of Chicago attendees.
4	The America's Cup snubbed Chicago. How upset are you?	Should I know what that is? I feel like I should know what that is.	So upset! Unbelievably upset! Wait, what's America's Cup again? Boats, right?	Not sure what the America's Cup is ...	Not as upset as I would be if the Bulls don't land some key pieces for the future.	Upset enough to binge eat a dozen doughnuts.
5	A man caught sleeping during a Yankees game is suing ESPN. Thoughts?	I'd be sleeping during Yankees baseball this season too.	Maybe he should sue the Yankees for being awful enough to induce sleep.	Zzzzzzzzz zzzzzzz zzzzzzz.	That man should also sue the N.Y. Knicks for running Melo out of town.	Sorry, dude. You snooze, you lose.

Tracking the Bulls' pursuit of Carmelo Anthony and LeBron James

The Bulls' search for a superstar to help Derrick Rose might be over. If a New York Daily News report is true, Carmelo Anthony will announce Thursday that he's re-signing with N.Y. Knicks. And sheridanhoops.com reports that there is a 90 percent chance that LeBron James will return to Cleveland. The Cavs reportedly are working on a trade to free up the necessary salary cap space to sign James.

Meanwhile, Rose experienced no issues during Tuesday's Bulls practice and practiced again Wednesday. So at least there's that.

Beers on draft at the Lagunitas Taproom
ABEL URIBE/TRIBUNE

Holy beer!

Lagunitas' Douglas Park brewery and taproom by the (very, very big) numbers

By Kate Bernot | FOR REDEYE

Chicago city planner Daniel Burnham famously said, "Make no little plans." Lagunitas took that to heart. It was way back in April 2012 when the brewery's founder, Tony Magee, announced that the California-based brewery would expand to his hometown of Chicago with a massive new production brewery and taproom. Naturally, there was much rejoicing. And then there was much finger tapping. Two weeks ago, Lagunitas finally threw open the doors to its Douglas Park taproom, giving most people their first views of the beer-making operation. Even if you've heard that the brewery is housed in a former steel plant, it's difficult to imagine the scale of this factory. Look over some of these stats and comparisons and then ... just go see it for yourself.

Pro tips for your Lagunitas visit

1. The CTA California Pink Line is your closest "L" stop.
2. Currently, the taproom has no bike racks but will let you stow your bike inside the front door.
3. Uber's ridesharing service did pick up from the taproom on my recent visit.
4. Only weekday tours in the taproom include free tastings.
5. The taproom accepts credit cards, and there is an ATM on site.

6. If you want to skip the tour, you can still view the brewery from the catwalks around the building during taproom hours, provided you transfer your beer to a plastic cup.
7. The brewery does offer afternoon tours on Mondays and Tuesdays, though the taproom is closed those days.
8. Yes, there are laser lights and a disco ball in the brewery's main hallway.

Sizing it up

300,000 square feet

The area of Lagunitas' Douglas Park brewery

That sounds pretty big ... and it is. Goose Island's Fulton Market production brewery stands at 50,000 square feet, and Revolution's Kedzie Street facility currently clocks in at 50,000 square feet, with a 40,000-square-foot expansion planned for the fall. Another way to put that: Six Goose Islands could fit inside Lagunitas.

Global prints pop with summer style

Chicago Tribune

When does a plain white T cross the border into exotic territory? When paired with one of this summer's multicultural prints.

The simplest shorts, pants and skirts become international symbols of jet-set style when rendered in an African wax print from Royal Native or a Peruvian motif from Anthropologie. Just add sun and sandals, and you'll shine straight through to September.

Tribal prints are a summer staple for those with bohemian sensibilities, but this spring they took a more serious turn on the runways. So if your lifestyle skews more complicated than a day at the beach, designers deliver a sophisticated interpretation of the trend too.

Sarah Burton combined intricate black and red beading with horsehair, ostrich feathers and black crocodile for the effect of a transcontinental warrior princess at Alexander McQueen. Colorful embroidery of indeterminate ethnicity adorned maxis and minis at Valentino. Edun and Zero + Maria Cornejo worked multicultural motifs in graphic black and white. At Givenchy, designer Riccardo Tisci cross-cultivated Japan and Africa for draped jersey dresses.

Kate Moss' latest Topshop collaboration includes a smock dress with Aztec-inspired embroidery. At H&M, Gisele Bündchen's capsule includes ethnic-print pajama-inspired pants and tops.

Whatever the age or budget or sensibility, there's a globe-trotting summer signature waiting for you, as surely as balmy breezes are (finally) blowing across the Northern Hemisphere.

"When you wear a tribal print you have the rich color and the bold patterns mixed together to create something so eye-catching you can't help but be drawn in," said Hilary Star de Roy, founder of Royal Native and a veteran of Diane von Furstenberg. "There are so many ways to rock them. But my favorite is to keep everything else simple and let the print stand out."

Rockin' the pony

Chicago Tribune

During her recent royal tour of New Zealand, Catherine, Duchess of Cambridge, stepped out in a sharply tailored, custom Alexander McQueen coat and a perfect ponytail. Smoothly volumized, with a wide lock of hair wrapped around the band, Middleton's pony looked relaxed yet royally polished.

Kate's 'do garnered raves on fashion and style blogs, showing she's not alone in appreciating the dependable hairstyle that works day and night, rain or shine. More than a fast solution on bad hair days, it's an instant styling trick—the ponytail's effortless, devil-may-care attitude balances the formality of structured suiting, dazzling jewelry and elegant dresses.

Though never out of style, the ponytail has undergone new iterations lately that have been showing up in abundance on runways and red carpets.

Celebrities in ponytails this season include Sandra Bullock and Emma Roberts at the Golden Globes and Taylor Swift at the Grammys. Beyoncé led the trend at the 2013 Grammys, with a long, pin-straight blond ponytail gathered at the nape of her neck.

Similar low, extremely long ponytails prevailed on the spring runways of designers such as Helmut Lang, DKNY, Altuzarra and Stella McCartney. At Victoria Beckham and Vera Wang, ponytails were looped through thick, black headbands.

Hairstylist Odile Gilbert created chic, ultra-sleek ponytails at Jason Wu by spritzing on Kerastase Gloss Appeal shine-enhancing spray before flat-ironing hair, smoothing tresses into place with Kerastase Short Mania pomade. Gold semi-circle barrettes were the finishing touch.

The pony parade continued on fall 2014 runways. New incarnations for fall included sharply side-parted styles at Hugo Boss, basket-weave texture at Fendi and undulating, banded ponytails at Valentino.

At Chanel, hairstylist Sam McKnight created slick, center-parted ponytails embellished with a kaleidoscopic mix of raglike strips of the brand's signature tweed, pearl and lace embellishments, miniature braids and crimped extensions.

Most of the new ponytails go to great lengths, so clip-in extensions offer a fast way to get the look.

Freddy Rodriguez works 'Night Shift'

Chicago Tribune

On the whole, actor Freddy Rodriguez doesn't have much in common with LeBron James.

But Rodriguez, a Bucktown native, points to one important similarity: At a young age, he, too, faced the potentially life-changing decision of whether to "go pro."

In 1994, just a year after graduating from Lincoln Park High School, Rodriguez found himself with three options. He could enroll at Columbia College Chicago (his parents' preferred choice); he could finish the audition process for the Goodman Theatre's production of "The Merchant of Venice"; or he could take a role in the Keanu Reeves-helmed period film "A Walk in the Clouds."

He chose the movie.

"LeBron went straight out of high school into the professional basketball world, and that was the choice I had to make, whether I was going to go pro or go to school," Rodriguez said. "I guess my justification was I could go to school to learn drama, where here I could do it firsthand and be in the professional world."

He's never looked back.

Most known for his Emmy-nominated turn as ambitious mortician Federico "Rico" Diaz on HBO's "Six Feet Under," Rodriguez has successfully bounced between TV and film throughout his 20-year career: His lengthy IMDB page lists at least one project every year since his 1994 screen debut.

Rodriguez's newest TV show, NBC's "The Night Shift," which premiered No. 1 in its timeslot and has maintained a Tuesday audience of about 6 million per episode, follows a group of doctors who work the night shift at San Antonio Memorial. Rodriguez plays the complex Michael Ragosa, the nighttime hospital administrator charged with keeping the budget balanced—and the resident bad boy doctor in check.

Freddy Rodriguez
ANTHONY SOUFFLE/TRIBUNE

Rodriguez, 39, says he's happy with his life and his career.

"Every day I feel blessed and incredibly grateful," he said with a wide, toothy smile. "Especially now that I'm coming up on the 20th anniversary of 'A Walk in the Clouds' and 'Dead Presidents' and my first round of films, which has really put things into perspective and has been an incredible reality check for me. It makes you grateful."

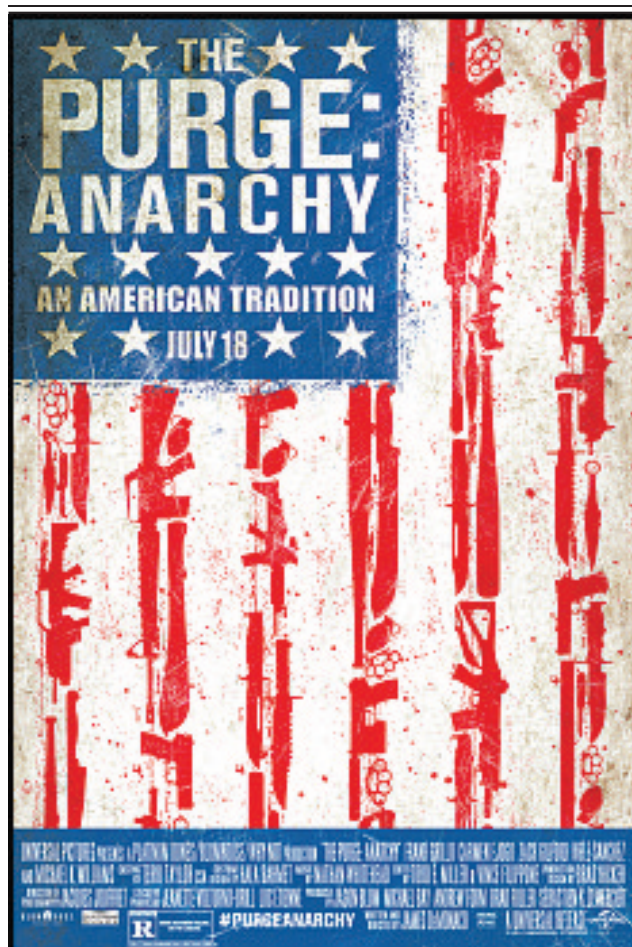

Rodriguez's West Coast lifestyle is a far cry from his upbringing in then-perilous Bucktown. In 1991, 16-year-old Rodriguez told the Tribune that he had been at "very, very, very high risk" of falling into gang life until, at 13, he wound up in a play produced by the non-profit Whirlwind Performance Company.

That show started him down the path that would eventually lead to Hollywood.

As a soon-to-graduate eighth grader, Rodriguez sported a smirk as he took a bow after performing Whirlwind's "City of Neighborhoods" at the Blackstone Theatre (now called the Merle Reskin). That was the moment Rodriguez decided to become an actor, he remembered.

"I starred in that play and I just sort of knew what I wanted to do," he said. "And it's all I have done since I was 13."

Greg Poehler lives the Swede life

MCT

Everything was hunky-dory in Greg Poehler's life. He was a lawyer, married to a lawyer and the father of three kids. Then two years ago he attempted something he'd always wanted to do: stand-up comedy.

That was the end of the life he'd known for 12 years. If his name sounds familiar, it should. He's the brother of Amy Poehler ("Parks and Recreation"). But instead of pursuing comedy like his older sister, he earned a law degree, fell in love with a Swedish lawyer, married her and moved to Sweden.

"I started doing stand-up comedy in Sweden, and that was kind of the first step," he said. "That went really, really well. It was something I'd always wanted to do. A few months later I sat in my attic and wrote the script for 'Welcome to Sweden,' which is based on my life. ... I said I wanted it to be sold to the U.S. and to Sweden and have a bunch of cameos and I will play the lead role."

All that may sound like a pipe dream. But it all came true, and no one is more surprised than Poehler. "It's amazing! It's a really bizarre kind of fairy tale," he said.

The comedy, "Welcome to Sweden," hits American airwaves Thursday on NBC. It's already aired in Sweden and has been a tumultuous hit. Out of 9 million Swedes, 3 million have been watching the show.

Laughing, Poehler said, "I hope NBC is not expecting that—[those are] Super Bowl numbers."

It all began when he met his future wife at work. "The first night we met she said, 'Would you ever consider moving to Sweden?' And I was like, 'Yeah.' I just wanted to have sex with her. I would've said anything at that point. And she held me to that. We lived together after that for five years in New York, so it was always part of the plan to move to Sweden. I put it off as long as I could."

But when their first son was born, it was time for a reckoning. "From New York City to Stockholm is such a huge difference in terms of family friendliness," he said. "That was the main reason behind the move. People say, 'I would give up everything to be with this person.' What happens when you do? That's really what this show is about."

The series begins the day he left his former life behind. When he transferred to Sweden, he had no job, no friends, no business connections. "I had my son," he said. "There was something about that move that I think a lot of people can identify with. There are certain times in your life when you have to reinvent yourself and who you were before doesn't really matter anymore."

When he first wrote the script in that chilly attic, he actually Googled "How to Write a Script." He sent it to his sister just to check that the formatting was correct. But she fell in love with it and offered to serve as executive producer (and also pull in some of her comedy friends for cameos).

Poehler, 39, says he's learned a valuable lesson from the experience. "The moral of my story is it's never too late. If there's something you've always wanted to do and think you'd secretly be good at ... even becoming a doctor—people have a passion for and feel they've missed it. It's something you're supposed to do when you're younger. But I'm proof it's never too late."

Jordan Hayes in 'Helix'

Syfy seeks new hits with spacey dramas

Los Angeles Times

The cable network Syfy, like the imperiled humans of "Battlestar Galactica," is voyaging into deep space in search of a future.

Since the award-winning space drama went off the air five years ago, Syfy has broadened its portfolio, dabbling in paranormal reality shows and the campy TV movie "Sharknado."

Now, with its biggest original series push in years, the channel is returning to geek-friendly serial dramas in the "Battlestar" mold.

The network is touting a full-blown space opera titled "Ascension" for November, followed by "The Expanse," a 10-episode thriller set two centuries in the future. The post-apocalyptic supernatural series "Dominion" and the arctic-set thriller "Helix" have debuted in the past year.

"It's been the vision of the network for a long time," said Bill McGoldrick, executive vice president of programming for Syfy. "Everybody's rooting for us to get back to that stuff and get you watching shows like 'Battlestar' live and not having to go years into the past."

A critical and commercial hit, "Battlestar" averaged 2.9 million viewers an episode in its first season in 2005. Throughout its full run, it averaged 2.4 million viewers and has since built its following through binge-watching online and on DVD.

Syfy's effort to reclaim the science fiction and fantasy area arrives amid a rush of science fiction programming from major networks and cable channels.

The genre has gone more mainstream, producing big hits like AMC's "The Walking Dead" and HBO's "Game of Thrones." Major broadcast networks have entered the game, too. Fox had a fall hit with the quirky Ichabod Crane drama "Sleepy Hollow," ABC has "Marvel's Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D." and CBS will debut "Extant," starring Halle Berry as an astronaut returned to Earth, in July.

And they are getting big numbers: "The Walking Dead" brought in a whopping 15.7 million viewers with its most recent season finale.

Although typical network fare about cops, doctors and lawyers continues to get strong ratings, the surge in niche programming reflects viewers' desires for thoughtful shows that put strong characters in extreme situations.

This isn't the first time the network has tried to tweak its image. When "Battlestar" was still on the air, the channel was known as "Sci Fi." It changed its name to Syfy in 2009 to reach a broader audience and has added reality programs including "Paranormal Witness."

To rekindle earlier glory, the network plans to focus on social media, which helped generate a surprise hit with "Sharknado." That effort has spawned sequels and licensing deals, but the network knows it needs fresh new programming, said Darcy Bowe, a vice president at the advertising buying firm Starcom.

"They don't want to be known for just flying sharks," she said.

VAMPING IT UP

Kristen Stewart's craziest hairdos don't just come out at night

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Oh, Kristen Stewart. Gone are her days of wearing her long, messy brown hair as a shield from the "Twilight" paparazzo. Instead, the actress, next appearing in Guantanamo drama "Camp X-Ray," debuted a short, choppy, red hairdo at Paris Fashion Week. Does it work for her edgy look? We traveled back to her styles of yesteryear to find out. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

PARIS FASHION WEEK July

This probably sounded like a good idea at the time. Then she woke up the next morning and was like "NO. OH NO." Dyeing the entire thing an insane color would make up for the mom chop.

CANNES FILM FESTIVAL May

This definitely was the precursor of summer things to come. This color is really spicy and striking on her, but a little less roots next time, please.

SUNDANCE FILM FESTIVAL January

A cute, delicate side braid that doubles as a Skrillex-like edgy statement, combined with lumberjack chic? Done!

CHANEL 'METIERS D'ART' SHOW December

Aha, up to your old hide-and-seek tricks, eh? Good thing that hair is gorgeous. (And no, we're not showing you what's going on with the pants.)

'PUNK: CHAOS TO COUTURE' MET GALA May 2013

Compare this hair to what Miley Cyrus did for the same event. Pathetic, you punk! But on its own, the style is lovely, so we can't complain too much.

'THE TWILIGHT SAGA: BREAKING DAWN—PART 2' MADRID PREMIERE November 2012

With bonus R. Patz (RIP love). That thing creeping in over her shoulder is a braid, but it looks more like one of the rats from "The Secret of NIMH." Flip that thing back behind you.

LITTLE GOSLING ON THE WAY

Any and all rumors of Eva Mendes and Ryan Gosling breaking up have been squashed by a huge piece of news today: The couple are expecting their first child. Us Weekly confirmed the news Wednesday, and as much as we don't want to believe it, we have to congratulate the future parents. They're going to have the prettiest baby in Hollywood.

HOT DATE AUG. 23-24

That's when Wizard World Inc. will launch the first Socialcon Chicago, thr.com reports. Set for the same weekend as the company's Chicago Comic Con at the Donald E. Stephens Convention Center in Rosemont, the event will feature social media stars like Nash Grier, Hayes Grier, Cameron Dallas and Carter Reynolds; Reggie Couz; Princess Lauren and Toby Randall. We've never heard of any of these people, but the kids are into some strange stuff these days.

Charge!

Yer not gettin' away with this one, see! Justin Bieber pleaded no contest Wednesday to a misdemeanor vandalism charge tied to a January egging of his neighbor's home, cnn.com reports. Das Bieb will serve two years supervised probation and five days of community service; pay $80,900 in restitution and attend 12 weekly anger management sessions. Damn, those were some expensive eggs!

MIKE WILL DATES HER

Well well, turns out Miley Cyrus is pretty good at keeping a secret after all. Us Weekly reported Wednesday that the "Bangerz" singer has been dating her producer, Mike Will Made-It, for about nine months. Admittedly, we probably should have seen this coming after her video for "23" dropped, but we were too distracted by all the tongue. You can't blame us.

HOT DATE SATURDAY

That's when "The Bachelor" will hold an open casting call from 1-5 p.m. at the Westin Michigan Avenue. Visit casting.bachelor.warnerbros.com for more information on how to apply. Also, please actually BE a bachelor.

HOT DATE JULY 23

That's when Blake Lively's as-yet-untitled lifestyle site will launch, according to Page Six. The site, which definitely hasn't been done by Gwyneth Paltrow before, will feature "curated fashionable items" and will "focus on artisans and products chosen by Lively, who will also appear in videos on the site." OK, her hair is better than Gwyneth's, we'll bite.

Sounds like a bomb

We aren't the only ones tired of listening to Robin Thicke. Billboard reports his latest stalker manifesto/album, "Paula," sold only 25,000 U.S. copies in its first week, down from 177,000 for "Blurred Lines" last year. Wait, wait. You think that's bad—the album debuted at No. 200 in the U.K., moving just 530 copies. Really, we can't help but smile a Grinchy smile in spite of ourselves.
